Stated dimensions are measured to the exterior boundaries of the exterior walls and the centerline of interior demising walls and in fact vary from the dimensions that would be determined by using the description and definition of the Unit set forth in the Declaration (which generally only includes the interior airspace between the perimeter walls and excludes interior structural components). Additionally, measurements set forth on any floor plan are generally taken at the longest points of each given room (so if the room were a perfect rectangle) with no regard for any irregularities or angles in the actual room typically be typically larger than the product obtained by multiplying the stated length times width. All dimensions are approximate and all floor plans and development plans are subject to change.
